Suffolk Univ. seeking to build $68m art center on Beacon Hill

By Peter Schworm, Globe Staff | September 9, 2008

A rendering of the academic building proposed for 20 Somerset St. that would replace the MDC building there.

Suffolk University filed plans with city officials yesterday for a new $68 million academic building, a 10-story, contemporary, glass-dominated structure overlooking a revamped public plaza atop Beacon Hill.

The Somerset Street building would replace the former Metropolitan District Commission headquarters, a brick building that has fallen into disrepair and has been unoccupied for several years. The new facility, a cornerstone of the university's expansion campaign, would house the university's art school, including a first-floor art gallery, and classrooms.

University officials presented preliminary designs of the building last week to a community task force studying the plan. Neighbors, who defeated earlier plans for a dormitory on the site, have voiced support for the new proposal, although neighborhood and city reviews of the design likely will last several months.

This summer, the city approved the university's broader expansion blueprint after a June agreement between university officials and the chief Beacon Hill neighborhood group.

The unusual town-gown accord prevents the university from expanding into the bulk of Beacon Hill in exchange for neighborhood support for the Somerset project and other planned university developments.

John Nucci, Suffolk's vice president for external affairs, who has led negotiations with Beacon Hill neighbors over expansion plans, said proposals for the plaza include an exhibit commemorating the history of the MDC.

The university hopes to transform the area, largely abandoned after workers leave for the day, into an attractive meeting place at a heavily trafficked intersection.

"It's really designed to be a public area," Nucci said. "We hope it becomes a gathering spot for state workers, residents, and students alike."

Nucci said Suffolk has agreed to pay the state $10 million for the property, which has structural problems and will be leveled to make way for the new building. Neighbors urged university officials to recognize the MDC's history of public conservation and construction in the new park, Nucci said.

The front of the building, which will overlook the plaza, will feature a clear facade to "create a sense of activity," Nucci said.

"Most folks feel there's a need to brighten up that area," he said. "Right now it's a 9-to-5 environment."

The back of the building, which overlooks the Garden of Peace, a memorial to city murder victims, will be translucent to convey a quieter feel, according to the design plans.

The university hopes to complete the building in 2011. Suffolk is poised to begin construction this fall on a 200-student dormitory and studio theater on the site of the historic Modern Theatre on Washington Street.

Bob O'Brien, a community task force member and executive director of the Downtown North Association, said the design was well-received, although some neighbors felt it was too contemporary for an area dominated by more traditional architecture.

O'Brien said he thought the building's open, modern design and a revamped plaza could energize the neighborhood.

"I am very encouraged by this," he said.

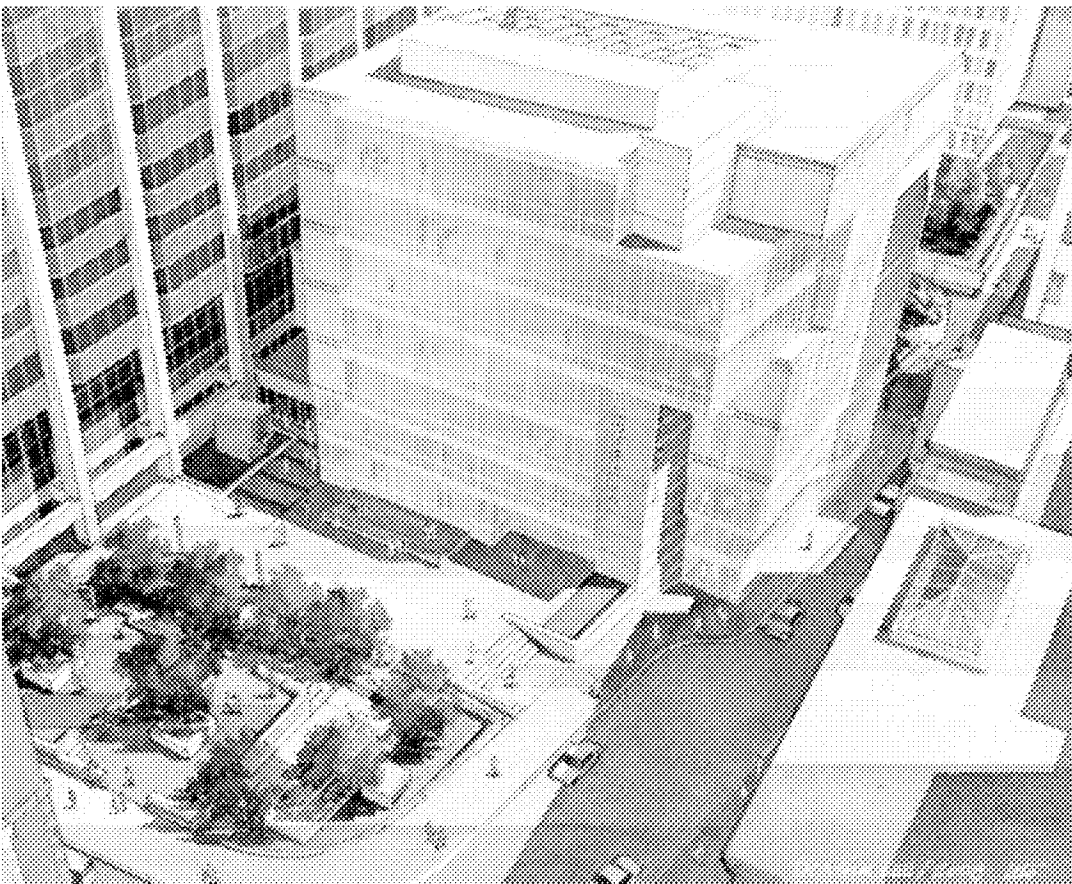

"This could have an immediate and very beneficial impact. There's a sense this building can affect the surrounding areas in many positive ways."

Michael Flaherty fights new City Hall

Challenges Tom Menino over plans

By Edward Mason | Tuesday, September 9, 2008

City Councilor Michael Flaherty, a leading foe of Mayor Thomas M. Menino's plan to move City Hall to the South Boston waterfront, is calling for the mayor to turn over reams of documents justifying the controversial relocation.

Flaherty, who heads a special City Council committee charged with evaluating the move, said he's calling for the materials because the administration is cooking up the plan in private.

"If they want to use taxpayer money to fund this pie-in-the-sky idea, the taxpayers deserve to know what their money is being used for," Flaherty told the Herald.

In a sweeping request he'll make today, Flaherty, widely expected to challenge Menino for mayor next fall, will ask for design plans for a new City Hall, the move's cost and the profit the city can make by selling the current building.

He also wants evidence the MBTA and city are working to ensure the new City Hall is as conveniently located as the current one, which is walking distance from the Green, Red, Orange and Blue subway lines.

And Flaherty, who believes Menino is foisting the building on South Boston, wants a list of meetings by Boston Redevelopment Authority officials and community leaders on the plan.

The documents must be turned over by Sept. 17.

Flaherty's request comes in advance of a Sept. 22 committee hearing on the move.

Dot Joyce, a Menino spokeswoman, rejected Flaherty's claim the administration has plotted in secret. She said the process has been transparent and open to the public.

"Nothing is being done in secret," said Joyce. "This is standard operating procedure for any new public facility being constructed."

Told about Flaherty's request, Joyce said some of the information Flaherty wants - such as the $800,000 cost of examining the pilings at Marine Industrial Park - can be found in the city's budget, which is online.

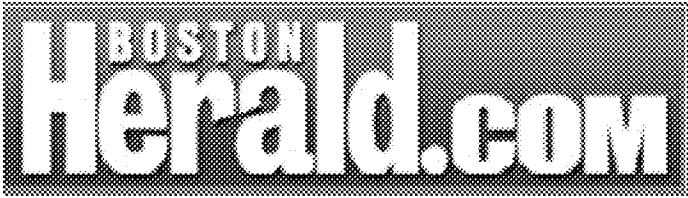

Menino has tried since 1996 to move City Hall, faulted for its hulking, cold exterior, wind-swept plaza and shabby interior.

"Building a lavish new building on the South Boston waterfront does not make schools better, neighborhoods safer or lower taxes," Flaherty said.

Flaherty, a citywide councilor, is one of several South Boston neighborhood leaders who have raised questions about Menino's City Hall relocation plan.

Subject: Cradles to Crayons Activate Boston campaign

Judith and Michael - We're applying to The Boston Foundation for a grant to activate Boston families, corporations, faith-based organizations and other groups on behalf of the City's children. We would like to share some of our thinking with you, and get your thoughts and ideas. Are there some times in the coming few weeks you would have available for us to meet? Below is a brief description of the proposal:

C2C's Activate Boston! project is designed to focus on, and enhance, our current level of engagement with Boston. Our primary function is to be an easy avenue through which existing resources can be leveraged to benefit disadvantaged children. C2C connects communities with abundance, such as Wellesley and Weston, with those with high need, such as Lawrence and New Bedford. Unlike smaller cities and towns, Boston is unique in that there is both a demonstrated need and the resources necessary to combat the ever widening economic gap amongst families. With the support of The Boston Foundation, C2C will expand our volunteer recruitment, product collection and distribution efforts in the city of Boston.

In 2007, we were able to provide 8,794 C2C KidPacks to Boston-based distribution partners, reaching approximately 5,500 of Boston's most vulnerable children (some of these children, especially those under the age of 3, are served multiple times per year; we serve a child as often as developmental milestones dictate). These packages represented almost half of our total 2007 KidPack output. Major neighborhoods included Dorchester (3,780 packs), Roxbury (1,825), and South Boston (549). Through our Ready for School program, we were able to distribute over 15,000 backpacks full of learning tools to students in Boston, representing over 56% of our total backpack distribution. Ready for School included a special relationship with the Boston Public Schools' Countdown to Kindergarten, through which 1,000 children entering kindergarten were given enrichment backpacks full of high-impact learning tools, manipulatives, and books. We partnered with the BPS 100-Word Challenge, providing books and dictionaries to aid the literacy development of first graders.

Through Activate Boston! C2C will ramp up our efforts to be the primary resource through which the people of Boston can help their friends and neighbors who may be living just a few blocks away. Located on the city's doorstep, C2C has a number of resources and programs at our disposal which uniquely positions us to engage many in the fight against poverty.

Our primary resource is our extensive network of social service distribution partners. We work with over 350 of our state's social service agencies, dozens in which are located in Boston. Our operation supports the work of major Boston organizations such as Catholic Charities, Bay Cove Human Services and Dimock. As we look to mobilize more of Boston's resources, our end goal is not to duplicate the tremendous work of these agencies, but help increase their effectiveness and capacity to continue to serve Boston's children.

Through the generous pro-bono support of Bain & Company, we recently completed an in-depth analysis and evaluation of the impact of our work. A March 2008 survey of our extensive social service distribution partner network revealed that our KidPacks and backpacks positively impact a child in a number of critical ways. Of 327 respondents, 75% reported that a package from C2C positively impacts a child's educational resources; 78% said that it aids a child's literacy; and 81% reported that a package from C2C helps a child's self-esteem.

While the impact on the children we serve is the primary reason for our work, our analysis also affirmed the critical service gap that C2C addresses in the non-profit sector. C2C's model of supporting social service partners has allowed hundreds of Boston-area agencies to more holistically serve their client families. In fact, in our recent partner survey, 69% of respondents reported that if the items they requested were not available from C2C, their clients would have to go without. Marylou Sudders, President and CEO of the MSPCC, tells us that "MSPCC relies on C2C for the goods to help families meet the needs of their children, ranging from cribs and strollers to backpacks and school supplies. We would be unable to meet the social, emotional and health needs without C2C."

Groups representing Boston-based schools, corporations, universities, churches, temples, state agencies and many citizens of Boston have visited our Giving Factory to benefit the children in their own neighborhoods. C2C has engaged thousands of Boston volunteers in our process; but the potential to engage more of Boston's community is significant. Through Activate Boston! we will increase our community and volunteer engagement of city-based volunteers and drive coordinators. We will reach out to Boston's faith-based community and corporations to host collection drives for essential children's items and volunteers at our Giving Factory. We will seek to develop a more holistic relationship with school partners including BPS and Mother Caroline Academy focused on service and the importance of giving back to your community. Through these actions, we know that we can inspire Boston's residents to do more to help those living in their city.

Thanks.

Dear Martha, I just got off the HUB web site. There were a few more postings added this afternoon. I applied for an ELA position at the Timility Middle School and a Grade 6th Teaching position at the Edwards Middle School. There was also a Social Studies position I took the liberty of applying for at Alternative Education. I wasn't sure if it was middle school level and if that is the case an ELA certification is accepted.

I know HR is very busy. Hopefully by the end of the week those of us without positions will know more about where we stand with regards to securing employment.

Best,

1. SUNDAY OPINION: Casino backers get all worked up

The Enterprise

It's a little strange that Middleboro officials Selectmen Chairman Adam Bond, in particular were hyperventilating over the Wampanoag Indians' attempt to meet with Gov. Deval Patrick to discuss the proposed $1 billion casino project planned for Middleboro.

Bond said he was upset that in a seven-page draft letter the Indians wrote to the governor, asking for negotiations to create a "gaming compact," there was no provision for Middleboro to have a seat at the table. Bond called on the tribe to "repair the wound" and make sure that Middleboro representatives got their foot in the door, too, or the town's deal with the Wampanoags would be just "an illusory partnership."

It turned out to be a whole lot of angst over nothing because the tribe said it was a mere oversight and that Middleboro would be their partner every step of the way apparently satisfying touchy Bond. Also, Middleboro already has collected $750,000 from the tribe and has a deal in place to collect many millions more if the casino ever gets built. We understand the town's concerns about infrastructure and the effects a massive gambling complex will have on the town, but all of that will be taken care of in due time. Those concerns certainly didn't stop Bond and others from enthusiastically welcoming the Indians to Middleboro, with dollar signs in their eyes that clouded all other issues.

They need to be patient. The governor is in no hurry to negotiate a deal with the Indians and has no reason to hurry. Nothing can happen before the federal government allows the land to be accepted into a trust for the Indians, then the state has six months to negotiate with the tribe. It would surprise us if informal talks weren't going on at this very moment, but since Gov. Patrick said there is no need for formal talks right now, there is no reason for Middleboro officials to get all worked up over the lack of progress or information coming from the state or the tribe.

Bond said he was "unhappy" that the Indian's letter to Patrick said nothing about Middleboro being at the negotiating table. But Middleboro has already conducted its negotiations with no regard for surrounding towns that would be affected almost as much as Middleboro and signed on the dotted line with the tribe. That was the time to make demands and ask questions. Officials should stop complaining and let the state and federal process run its course.

Animal rights activists are trying to put it out of business. A local legislator is trying to expand it. And the owners just want to hang onto what they have.

But through all the controversy surrounding Raynham Park, the people who have flocked to its greyhound races over nearly seven decades say they're just looking for a good time.

On a recent Saturday night, the five-star Terrace Dining Room overlooking the track was packed with a bachelor party in full swing beside a table full of Red Hat Society women.

Nearby sat Robin Curry of Middleboro, who booked a table overlooking the half-mile race track for her husband Robert's 55th birthday. As the couple celebrated, they bet on a few races.

Curry did well in the beginning, but her luck ran out by the end of the night. She said she usually gambles downstairs in the grandstand, but stepped upstairs for her husband's special night.

Also among the crowd were Laurie Sylvia and her husband, Steven, both of Walpole. The couple dined on filet mignon, with desserts of apple pie and Toll House cookie pie.

For Laurie, trips to the track have been a family affair for 35 years since she grew up in the Hyde Park section of Boston. She said she'd like to see slot machines come to the track.

"Massachusetts loses out. People are gambling anyway," she said.

Faced with competition from casinos in neighboring states, the 68-year-old track has undergone a series of renovations to coax customers away from the big casinos just over the border in Connecticut and Rhode Island.

Another reason for customers to choose Raynham Park over out-of-state establishments died in June when a bill filed by Rep. David L. Flynn, D-Bridgewater that would have allowed slot machines at the state's four racetracks failed in the state Senate.

Flynn, who has vowed to re-file the bill again next year, said he expects the state's financial condition to be even worse by then, and is betting that the $500 million in state revenue expected from allowing slots will outweigh the opposition to casino gambling.

While the governor's plan to open commercial casinos in this state hit a dead-end earlier this year, Scott Peterson, director of operations at the track, said "We're already competing with casinos. A full-blown casino would put us under."

The track first opened in 1940 and by 1989 under the ownership of George Carney it had set the world record for the largest annual handle of $240 million.

Over the years, there's been a slow but steady decrease in the town of Raynham's cut, said Town Administrator Randall A. Buckner.

Buckner said that after an all-time high of nearly $700,000, the town now receives $440,000 annually.

The reason is the explosive success of the tribal casinos in Connecticut. Sales took another hit when Twin Rivers in Rhode Island stepped into the market.

If slots are not allowed at Raynham Park, some of the track's 600 workers fear they will lose their jobs.

"My job is very important to me," said Irene Brennan of Brockton, who has worked at the track for seven years. "The state should back any effort to keep jobs here. We lose a lot of business to Rhode Island and Connecticut."

3. Greyhound group shows 'collisions' on dog tracks, hopes to sway voters to ban racing

By Jessica Scarpati

Starz Voice approached the starting line, a dark jacket with her number, 8, snug around her short white fur.

The 61-pound, 2-year-old greyhound surged out of the gate with seven other dogs on June 25, 2007 she was positioned farthest from the center of the race track at Raynham Park picking up speed as she neared the first turn.

Then, calamity.

Starz Voice and another dog are seen tumbling off the track and slamming into a wall breaking her leg and causing her to be euthanized, state records show in a Web video being released today by anti-dog racing activists.

Advocates said last week that they hope footage of seven "collisions" at Raynham Park in the four-minute video will sway voters this November to phase out dog racing in Massachusetts by 2010 on ballot question 3.

"The images speak for themselves," said Christine A. Dorchak, president of GREY2K USA, who authored the ballot question. "People need to see the reality of dog racing and make a judgment."

The footage was compiled over a year from races broadcast live on the Web sites for Raynham Park and Wonderland

Greyhound Park in Revere, Dorchak said.

The group saved and reviewed the footage, she said.

Although the video released to the public will show only a few collisions from Raynham Park, the anti-racing group said they catalogued 397 collisions from "thousands" of races at both tracks.

Raynham Park owner George Carney said Friday that collisions are "unfortunate" but not common.

"As far as I'm concerned, I can't make any apologies. Accidents do happen," said Carney, a Brockton resident.

"But for the number of races that are run ... the percentage of accidents is very minute," he added. "It's part of racing."

Earlier dog-racing bans have failed

This is not the first time a dog-racing ban has come before voters. It failed by less than two percentage points in 2000.

The Supreme Judicial Court declined to put it on the ballot in 2006 when it was bundled with dog fighting, noting the two should be separate questions.

This year, anti-racing activists said their collection of "recent, relevant and documented" records, photos and videos from the tracks will resonate with voters.

"It's not our information. It's their information. We're just the agents," Dorchak said. "

State gambling expert Richard McGowan, a Boston College business professor, was unsure how wide an audience a Web-only video would reach, but said he expected there to be "a lot more public sentiment to back" anti-racing activists this year.

"I would be surprised if the tracks win that vote, and I think that's why they were so heavily trying to get slot machines at the tracks," he said.

That apparent financial instability may even make November's vote irrelevant, McGowan said.

"There's a little bit of irony here," he said. "Even if (anti-racing groups) lose this vote ... there could very easily be no dog track because nobody is making any money (off them)."

The Committee to Protect Dogs, which raised $300,000 as of the last reporting period, said they have no plans to make the video into a television commercial, citing high costs associated with such a move.

Dorchak acknowledged the group wasn't "savvy" in 2000 and was "naive" to think they could win with little money and no hard evidence.

The message has also changed, she said. Eight years ago, the group focused on Massachusetts' place in the national dog racing circuit.

This year, she said, they will highlight the injuries and boarding at local tracks, coupled with the racing industry's financial decline.

"We have really tried to compile information without editorializing what it means," Dorchak said.

Hundreds would lose jobs

Carney, the Raynham track owner, countered that the group was "grasping at straws" by using the footage to show what he claimed was an uncommon occurrence.

"I intend to beat them in November," he said, but noted he was "concerned" for his employees if the public becomes swayed by the video.

"If a dog has an unfortunate incident, that doesn't mean 650 people should be put out of work," Carney said.

Dorchak said the group is "sensitive" to job loss, but said she did not foresee the dog track jobs lasting long anyway.

"Certainly, no one wants to see job loss, but we have made a responsible proposal," she said. "Our economy should not be based on cruelty to dogs."

Anti-racing activists and track officials estimate that Raynham Park, which is closed Tuesdays, hosts about 14 races most days. The track about doubles that volume on weekends because it has evening and matinee races.

Wonderland in Revere generally hosts fewer races per day, the group said.

In the dog racing industry, a "card" represents a day's worth of races. The anti-racing group said they watched and catalogued 456 cards since May 2007.

Because Raynham sometimes hosts more than 14 races per card and Wonderland usually hosts less, the group estimated each card had an average of 12 races per card bringing the estimated total races catalogued to more than 5,000.

Raynham also had the lion's share of collisions 365, versus Wonderland's 32 according to the group's analysis.

110 Arlington Street does not look good. The Bay Village guidelines say no roof top additions and no new balconies and that windows should be retained in their original configuration. Our staff person worked with the architect to try to present some other options but the BV commission rejected them. It doesn't help that a previous owner had submitted proposals (that the commission liked) that didn't involve visible rooftop additions or changes to the existing windows. I wasn't sure if you got my last email. This letter was sent out to the Mayor and official invites are going out in the next couple of weeks. The ribbon cutting has been scheduled for 11 - 1 pm on 10/29 at the Lodge at 125 S. Huntington. I have also included the Hope Lodge fact sheet. Brigham & Women's Hospital, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and Massachusetts General Hospital have each donated seven-figure gifts to help make Hope Lodge a reality. With the generous support of many individuals, corporations, and foundations in our community, such as AstraZeneca, Hologic and Eastern Savings Bank, we are proud to have raised nearly $26 million of the $27 million needed to open the Hope Lodge.

Dear Friends,

As you know, this year I am on the ballot and I would be honored to once again serve the 1st Suffolk District for the next two years.

I need your help on September 16 and in November to assist us in any way on Election day if possible. If you are interested please link the appropriate link.

Thank you for all of your help and support!

Michael –

This morning, I will drop off a folder with the second item that I hope Mayor Menino will be able to sign tomorrow. This is the signature page for the certification submission.

I will also enclose the nomination letter that Garry Gottlieb has to submit under the new process requirements – and well as hard copy of the appointments letter that requires the Mayor's signature. You already forwarded the electronic copy of the appointments to Ramon Soto.

Would you want me to write a memo to the Mayor or to you explaining the need for these signatures – or should I just leave the explanation to you, based on my previous e-mails?

Michael –

Thanks for moving the appointment letter along. There is another document for the Mayor to sign, but we usually secure the PIC Chair's signature before the Mayor's. I am waiting on Gary Gottlieb's signature before forwarding the form to you. I should have it by the end of the day on Friday. (I attach a signature page without Gary's signature, for your reference).

The signatures signify that the chief elected official and the workforce board chair are aware of the "assurances" for certification. These are requirements such as majority business membership, conflict of interest provisions, open meeting law, and other elements which are routine for compliance. I also attach the full list of assurances that the Mayor's signature acknowledges. We have secured the Mayor's signature on this form every other year for as long as I can remember.

Michael –

Conny suggested that you might be most helpful in securing the Mayor's signature on the attached re-appointment letter. I have to admit, I panicked a bit when I read this morning that the Mayor is going to Italy. I do have until next Tuesday to get this done, but I figure I should take a shot through you today (if only to line it up for his return).

This appointment letter complies with a new procedure that Secretary Suzanne Bump has put in place to certify certain workforce boards as "high performing." In addition to the necessary stature, this determination will come with minor financial benefits, eligibility for innovation funds. The names on the list have all attended PIC Council meetings. This is a compliance exercise, so that we qualify to have our strategic plan considered. We do all of this in partnership with Conny.

The federal government requires that workforce boards be majority business members. There is some softness in the list that we will have to address with new appointments later this fall, going into our November 5 annual business meeting. Paul O'Brien and Jay McCabe have retired from their business positions and should soon step down from the Council, but not until we have replacements. In addition, I have added Jim Rooney who has expressed interest, based on his current position and his experience on the Council from his chief of staff days. We do need a private sector member from the hospitality industry, but I do know that the Mayor will need to be okay with this one new appointment.

I will call near the end of the day to check in. Feel free to call me anytime – cell or office.

For the 29 year-old Gregoire, experience is key

To Danielle Gregoire, her primary race for the Statehouse is all about experience.

But Gregoire just turned 29 years old.

Gregoire is currently locked in a primary battle against Matthew Giancola in Middlesex County's 4th District state House of Representatives seat, vying for the Democratic nomination to succeed state Rep. Stephen LeDuc (D-Marlborough), who retired earlier this year.

Giancola turns 23 this week and, according to Gregoire, too inexperienced for the position.

"He just graduated from college. He's never had a real job. He's never had to try to make ends meet," Gregoire told PolitickerMA.com. "All of those things make a huge difference in the way people interact with people in their lives and in their work."

Chang-Diaz reports over $45,000 more cash on hand than Wilkerson

With a little more than a week before the Sept. 16 primary, Democratic challenger Sonia Chang-Diaz has a significant monetary advantage over her opponent, state Sen. Dianne Wilkerson.

According to reports filed by both campaigns with the Office of Campaign and Personal Finance, Chang-Diaz has just over $51,000 cash on hand compared to Wilkerson's $5,000.

Chang-Diaz is challenging Wilkerson for the second time in as many election cycles. In 2006, Chang-Diaz nearly unseated Wilkerson in an all write-in race.

Subject: Request for Meeting with Mayor for 15 min. by Prof. Padraig O'Malley

Molly & Michael,

Padraig O'Malley is the Joe Moakley Professor of International Peace and Reconciliation at the McCormack Graduate School at UMass Boston. The McCormack Center will be hosting an international forum on peace in cities in Boston next spring. The conference will be focused on peace in Bagdad in particular. Prof. O'Malley would like the Mayor to take a leading role in the conference. Molly has a folder with description of the conference.

I am very close friends with Prof. O'Malley's nephew, and they came to me to see if the Mayor had 15 min. between Sept. 16-19 to meet with Prof. O'Malley regarding the conference. O'Malley leaves for international travel the week after next thus the tight timeframe.

Let me know if this meeting or a meeting with someone in the administration works. I thought this might be a nice forum for the Mayor to further demonstrate the international nature of the City as well as the work on peace issues.

Thanks,
John

Brief Description of Conference:

The Moakley Center will launch a Forum for Divided Cities (FDC) with a three-day conference in spring 2009, and thereafter act as its secretariat. The planning committee will meet to inaugurate the FDC in Boston. Each year the Forum will meet in one of the member cities. The cities tentatively identified for participation include Baghdad, Belfast, Kirkuk, Beirut, Brussels, Mitrovica (Kosovo), and Kaduna (Nigeria).

Highlights

- T crisis, controversies sully Mr. Fix-it image of Grabauskas (Boston Globe)
By Noah Bierman -- Daniel A. Grabauskas arrived at the MBTA as the guy who could fix the unfixable. He had transformed the state's Registry of Motor Vehicles, a pit that held drivers virtually hostage for two or three hours when they renewed their licenses, into a place with Wal-Mart-style greeters at the door, a modern computer system, and 15-minute waiting times.

- MBTA May Text Commuters Updates (WCVB)

System Still Years From Implementation

The MBTA said it hopes to take the guessing game out of commutes soon by providing riders with a new system that will tell them when the next train or bus will arrive. NewsCenter 5's Steve Lacy reported that the aim is to drive more people to public transportation by taking the guesswork out of travel times. Some of the ideas include LED signs at bus and subway stations, similar to those already in use on the Silver Line, or a system that sends text messages to riders' cell phones.

- A Greenway Opportunity (Tom Palmer's Journal)

The Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway will celebrate its inauguration on Sat., Oct. 4 - though it's certainly not complete and will likely evolve and improve for years. The parks themselves are done, for the most part, but progress on the development parcels seems to be slowing, not increasing. Those are the three blocks with highway ramps on them.

- Front-Row Seats on Broadway, if You Dare (New York Times)

By William Neuman -- NEW YORK -- As if New York wasn't stimulating enough already, the city has provided a new kind of thrill right in the heart of Midtown: an esplanade carved into Broadway where people can sit and relax as cars and trucks whiz by. And while the esplanade seems to have become an instant hit with office workers and tourists — the metal benches, tables and chairs (some under red umbrellas) were rarely empty on Monday morning, even though they have been out for only a few days — many eyed the traffic warily.

- Acela trains may expand to meet demand (Boston Globe)

WASHINGTON - Amtrak may add cars to its Acela, the fastest US passenger train, and raise fares as riders fill coaches on the Washington-to-Boston route, chief executive officer Alexander Kummant said. Demand for the high-speed service also may spur Amtrak to levy a surcharge to help buy additional equipment, Kummant said in an interview at the Washington headquarters of the national passenger railroad.

U.S. Lags Behind Two-Wheeled Boom

By Blaine Harden -- TACHIA, Taiwan -- Antony Lo is one happy biker. He is 60 but looks younger, with a body buffed by commuting 130 miles a week on his bike. He is also president of Taiwan-based Giant, the world's largest bicycle company, where sales are soaring, helped along by global anxiety over oil prices. With undisguised glee, Lo says: "High-priced gasoline is here to stay. I tell my people we are just at the beginning of a very big cycling boom."

Subject: "Primary" Opportunities - Tomorrow

Dear WFP Supporter,

Tomorrow is Primary Day. If you're a Democrat in the right district, there are some real opportunities to elect candidates who will stand with us.

If you're not in the right district, well, you'll have to wait till November to cast a vote (on the WFP ballot line!) that really counts (see below to find your district).

Here are the top five priority races:

STATE SENATE

There is a decent chance that Republicans will lose control of the State Senate for the first time in 40 years this November. It can't come a moment too soon, because the current leadership has blocked us on health care, tax cuts for working people, proper funding of mass transit, and so much more.

But a change in party is not enough. We need a change in politics as well. We need to elect progressive, energetic leaders who will stand up to the enormous pressure they're sure to face from the real estate industry, insurance companies, and other big-money donors. It's no more complicated than that.

Daniel Squadron (District 25, Northwest Brooklyn / Downtown Manhattan) - His focus on fair taxes, affordable housing, education and campaign finance reform is music to our ears. He's a true progressive, and exactly the kind of leader we need when the big fights are on the line. Up against a 30-year incumbent, Squadron has surprised everyone (especially his opponent) with the vigor and seriousness of his campaign.

Joe Mesi (District 61, Erie and Genesee Counties) - Another candidate for State Senator who knows something about putting up a fight is Joe Mesi (literally in this case, as he's a former boxer). From a blue collar, union family, he knows the challenges facing working families because he's lived them. He's watched as living-wage, family-supporting jobs have become harder and harder to find in Western New York. In the fight for an economy that works for everyone, it's hard to imagine a better ally.

Kevin Parker (District 21, Central Brooklyn) - Parker hasn't served in Albany long, but even in his first 2 terms he has established himself as a creative, progressive leader. He could well be the Chairman of the Energy Committee if the Democrats take the Senate, and will be in a good position to help advance the "Green Jobs/Green Homes" proposals that are circulating.

STATE ASSEMBLY

Sheldon Silver (District 64, Lower Manhattan) - Sometimes the candidate who'll fight for working families is a challenger, sometimes it's an incumbent who's been doing it for years. Think about Teddy Kennedy if you want the best example of such a person at the national level.

Time after time, on the crucial fights of the day - Silver has been the most important leader standing up to right-wing corporate power. He beat back Republican attempts to end rent regulation, slash public schools, and reduce access to healthcare coverage. He actually believes that the government has a role to play in making sure everyone has a decent shot in life. That's not trivial.

Just last session, he led the way on legislation to create a paid family leave program, to expand affordable housing, to cut taxes on working families and raise taxes on millionaires, and to create a public campaign finance system that would finally end the dominance of big money in Albany.

Shelly Silver isn't perfect - no politician is. But those bills could become law next year if the State Senate flips, and Shelly's leadership is there to get it done. (more on why the WFP endorsed Silver)

Jonathan Smith - (District 102 - Poughkeepsie region) - Smith is looking to take on an incumbent Republican in November, but has to win the Democratic Primary first (he already has the WFP line). He's full of energy, and totally committed to advancing a progressive response to the property tax crisis.

The balance of power in the Assembly isn't at stake, but the legislature always needs fresh blood, and Jonathan will be another voice for progressive change in Albany.

Every year, hundreds of candidates across the state apply for the Working Families Party endorsement. WFP members interview them all, and decide which one will fight hardest for the issues facing working families in New York.

We don't care whether they are Democrats or Republicans. We just want candidates who will stand up for middle-class, working-class and poor people.

Be sure to see the full list of candidates the WFP has endorsed in 2008.

See you at the polls,

Bertha Lewis, Bob Master, Sam Williams
WFP Co-Chairs

Dan Cantor
WFP Executive Director

This morning, I will drop off a folder with the second item that I hope Mayor Menino will be able to sign tomorrow. This is the signature page for the certification submission.

I will also enclose the nomination letter that Garry Gottlieb has to submit under the new process requirements – and well as hard copy of the appointments letter that requires the Mayor's signature. You already forwarded the electronic copy of the appointments to Ramon Soto.

Would you want me to write a memo to the Mayor or to you explaining the need for these signatures – or should I just leave the explanation to you, based on my previous e-mails?

Thanks for moving the appointment letter along. There is another document for the Mayor to sign, but we usually secure the PIC Chair's signature before the Mayor's. I am waiting on Gary Gottlieb's signature before forwarding the form to you. I should have it by the end of the day on Friday. (I attach a signature page without Gary's signature, for your reference).

The signatures signify that the chief elected official and the workforce board chair are aware of the "assurances" for certification. These are requirements such as majority business membership, conflict of interest provisions, open meeting law, and other elements which are routine for compliance. I also attach the full list of assurances that the Mayor's signature acknowledges. We have secured the Mayor's signature on this form every other year for as long as I can remember.

Conny suggested that you might be most helpful in securing the Mayor's signature on the attached re-appointment letter. I have to admit, I panicked a bit when I read this morning that the Mayor is going to Italy. I do have until next Tuesday to get this done, but I figure I should take a shot through you today (if only to line it up for his return).

This appointment letter complies with a new procedure that Secretary Suzanne Bump has put in place to certify certain workforce boards as "high performing." In addition to the necessary stature, this determination will come with minor financial benefits, eligibility for innovation funds. The names on the list have all attended PIC Council meetings. This is a compliance exercise, so that we qualify to have our strategic plan considered. We do all of this in partnership with Conny.

The federal government requires that workforce boards be majority business members. There is some softness in the list that we will have to address with new appointments later this fall, going into our November 5 annual business meeting. Paul O'Brien and Jay McCabe have retired from their business positions and should soon step down from the Council, but not until we have replacements. In addition, I have added Jim Rooney who has expressed interest, based on his current position and his experience on the Council from his chief of staff days. We do need a private sector member from the hospitality industry, but I do know that the Mayor will need to be okay with this one new appointment.

I will call near the end of the day to check in. Feel free to call me anytime – cell or office.

In addition, I have added Jim Rooney who has expressed interest, based on his current position and his experience on the Council from his chief of staff days. We do need a private sector member from the hospitality industry, but I do know that the Mayor will need to be okay with this one new appointment.

I will call near the end of the day to check in. Feel free to call me anytime – cell or office.

Spanish Word of the Day
Monday, September 8, 2008

uña, noun (unya)
nail

La uña usually refers to a fingernail:

Antes se mordía las uñas.
He used to bite his nails.

But it can also refer to your toenails:

una uña encarnada
an ingrown toenail

When people start to get vicious in an argument or confrontation, and metaphorically show their teeth, the phrase in Spanish is sacar las uñas, word for word to show your nails:

No dudan en sacar las uñas cuando les hace falta.
They are not slow to show their teeth when they need to.

Michael and Dan:

I have attached the names of executive directors and trustees of foundations from which we recently sought support. When possible, I listed the affiliations of trustees.

The foundations are:

1. Eastern Bank Charitable Foundation- $50k capital grant for renovations
2. Mabel Louise Riley Fund- $100k capital grant for renovations
3. Cabot Family Charitable Trust- $30k capital grant for renovations
4. Citizens Banks Foundation- $30k for general operating support
5. TD Bank North- $15k for general operating support

Thanks for your continued support.

Cordially,

Kevin

Dear Colleen,

I wanted to inform you that on 9/4/08 we dropped of the stamped plans as requested by ISD, Plans Examiner, Luis Santana – 617-961-3286.

In addition to the request for stamped plans the letter went on to say;

Your application requires relief from ZBA, other information may be required – but no explanation of next steps. We would be most grateful if you would help us through the process. My first question is do I need to file something with the ZBA know of wait until Luis reviews the plans? Please advise.

Good morning Commissioner,

At your request, I looked into the appointments of the special commission to study the Massachusetts contributory retirement systems. The only open slots, to be appointed by the Governor, are designated as someone with professional experience in employment benefits or in actuarial science, and a member of the MMA. I spoke to the MMA and requested that you be their appointment, but they had already decided on their choice.
